Introduction

- scientific communication is the same until the beginning on 21st century
- the copyrights is usually owned by publishers
- institutions/libraries pay for journals subscription
- researchers from some countries do not have access to recent scientific research

Open access in the EU

- the European Commission started with first activities in the area of scientific communication in 2004
- in 2012 EU accepts documents about open access
- in 2014 Horizon 2020
 - mandatory open access to all peer-reviewed publications from co-funded projects (OpenAIRE)
 - the EU member states should do the same for the national research funding

Benefits of open access and repositories

- efficient re-use of past research
- promotion of research results, researchers and the institutions
- possibility of increased citations
- encouragement of innovations
- sharing knowledge with students and general public
- 24/7 access

Repository SciVie

- financed contribution by EUFORINNO project
- launched in 2013 (software eprints 3, adjustment Mira Trebar, Miha Peternel, UL FRI)
- Science de la Vie

 - Agricultural Institute of Slovenia
 - National Institute of Biology
 - Biotechnical faculty at University of Ljubljana, Department of Wood Science and Technology
- aim: meeting the requirements of EU co-financers
